

Council shuts down Radio McGill

by Craig Toomey

Radio McGill was closed down last night by Students' Council for alleged "gross misconduct" in its operation.

The dramatic move resulted from several allegations made by External Vice-President Earle Taylor in a detailed report he submitted to the Council. These included charges that people connected with Radio McGill damaged equipment in the Union building, misused its facilities, and threatened Union employees.

Although several letters and documents were presented to support these allegations, Taylor admitted most of it was circumstantial evidence.

Claiming that Radio McGill was no longer under the control of responsible and capable people and that it has failed to carry out its proper function as a university radio, Taylor said "the station must be closed down and a committee formed to review its operations."

This move was strongly contested by arts and science representative Will Hoffman, who argued that "the people who have done the specific wrong-doings should be prosecuted and not the operation itself."

Management rep Bennett Little, however, disagreed with Hoffman, saying "it's not a question of individual guilt but rather of the guilt of the organization by abetting these crimes. There are too many rip-offs going on down there, and the services the station is contributing now do not merit its full operation."

Despite the objections of some Council members, the motion to close the radio station was passed without Council hearing a member of the Radio McGill staff.

Irwin Haberman, internal co-ordinator of Radio McGill—along with many other staff members—expressed shock and dismay over the Council decision.

"I was given no indication whatsoever that something as drastic as this would happen," he explained while moving staffers' equipment out of the Radio offices.

"The council has failed in its commitments to the student body by passing this motion in such a haphazard way," he said.

Haberman explained how many advertisers using Radio McGill may sue the council for breaking their contracts with the station.

"Many university clubs and societies will also suffer from the council's decision to cut Radio's public address system," he continued.

"I agree with the concept of forming a review committee, but the ending of operations is uncalled for," he said.

Council passes honorariums

All the budgets passed by the summer committee of Students' Council were ratified last night, including honorariums for the Student Society executive.

Some members of the Council called for the abolition of all honorariums, saying that there are many people on campus who put in just as much time providing services for students as the Student Society executive, and yet they receive nothing for their efforts. They also argued that the question of honorariums should be decided in the winter and not during the summer.

An amendment to stop all future honorariums was easily defeated however. Instead, the Council decided to ratify the present honorariums and to form a committee to study the matter further.

Thus, the five executives in question: President Paul Drager, Internal Vice-President Mark Bernier, External Vice-President Earle Taylor, finance director Don Schreiber, and David Weiner will receive a total of $1,300 for services carried out during the summer.

Sir George library workers stage walkout

by Robert Huffman

Sir George library workers filed off the job at 2 p.m. yesterday and picketed the university's Hall building on de Maisonneuve Ave. for more than four hours. The walkout was the third in eight days by the 90-member National Union of Sir George Williams University Employees in its bid to budge the administration from its contract position.

The picketing, which followed a meeting of the union membership, was the first such action to take place in addition to the walkouts. A few Sir George students and two professors joined the 75 pickets. Marching continued for four hours and the walkout itself ended at 11 p.m.

Signs such as "We can't eat library books!" reflected the workers' desire for a substantial wage hike. Library pay currently averages about $4,600 per year. Other issues such as job classification and transfer to another campus figure in the points of worker-administration conflict.

Negotiations will resume tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. with the provincial government conciliator. Monetary issues and job description will be the main discussion items.

A student support group will be setting up a kiosk in the Hall building today, and there will be a meeting of the strike support group on Tuesday.

As usual, the library will be open today for studying purposes but it is uncertain whether staff will be on hand to check out books.

Council delays taking action on PGSS request

Students' Council last night voted to study whether education students with bachelor's degrees should be classified as members of the Post-Graduate Students' Society (PGSS).

The education students in question, known as 1-G Diploma students, last year asked to be transferred from the Education Undergraduate Society (EUS) to the PGSS.

The council was asked to ratify this transfer, but Finance Director Don Schreiber objected, saying the PGSS was just after the fees of the 1-G students.

Under the new arrangement, Students' Society fees now going to the EUS would go to the PGSS instead. And the Students' Society itself would get less money from the 1-G students.

Schreiber said the PGSS was out to "screw" the EUS and the Students' Society, and he recommended that the students remain in the EUS.

The council sent the question to a committee that must report by October 30. In the meantime, the students' fees will be held in trust by the Students' Society.

Martin Daly, president of the PGSS, said the council action was simply a way of delaying the whole issue another year, as it has been delayed in the past.

"Some councillors say we are trying to screw the Students' Society and the EUS," he added. "Our only answer to that is that the 1-G Diploma students came to us; we didn't go to them."

Pauline Vaillancourt reinstated

by Arnold Bennett

The McGill political science department has lost its bid to "terminate" Pauline Vaillancourt.

The executive committee of the Board of Governors decided September 10 to renew the contract of the political science assistant professor, reversing a decision it took last year on the recommendation of the department.

Last year's decision not to renew Vaillancourt's contract aroused considerable opposition in McGill and in Quebec as a whole; it was charged that Vaillancourt had been fired because of her radical political views and her organizing work for the McGill Faculty Union.

The Board of Governors' reversal came on the heels of the report of a committee of inquiry set up by the Canadian Association of University Teachers (CAUT). The CAUT established the committee in May, on Vaillancourt's request, after she had exhausted all the channels of appeal within McGill.

The report rejected all the major contentions of the department. If the committee's decision is taken as a precedent, departments in future will have to justify their decisions, just as the McGill department had to in this case. According to Immanuel Wallerstein, president of the McGill Faculty Union, all departments up to now have claimed that they do not have to elaborate on their decisions.

The committee's decision establishes that a faculty member on a probationary appointment has a right to a "proper consideration" for renewal, and therefore to a "reasonable judgement."

CAUT executive secretary Donald Savage, whose testimony was incorporated into the committee's decision, said "the right to a reasonable judgement means that a department cannot decide a matter of renewal in a biased or arbitrary manner. It cannot ground its judgement in non-academic considerations or give one form of consideration to one faculty member and a different form to another."

The committee accepted Vaillancourt's contention that the department based its decision on a small and improper sampling of her scholarship. In addition, Savage testified that "a department cannot decide against renewal on grounds of an absence of scholarly publications, if the faculty member's scholarly publications outnumber those of most of his colleagues."

The committee rejected the department's evaluation of Vaillancourt's teaching, on the grounds that it was neither "careful" nor "comparative," and declared that the department should have heard Vaillancourt's case and discussed it with her. According to Wallerstein, this crucial procedural right is the one most frequently disregarded.

The department's argument that it should not be obliged to present comparative assessments of Vaillancourt and others of similar status in the department was shot down by the committee, which ruled at the outset of the case that such comparisons were called for by the CAUT requirements of "consistency."

The committee ruled that "new standards which reverse previous understanding and customs may not be created midstream in the judgement process during which the individual's competence is being measured."

In its statement of reasons for not renewing Vaillancourt's contract, the department had claimed that anyone in her specialization "must possess exceptional qualities of leadership and co-operation" and that she did not meet these criteria.

The CAUT committee, however, pointed out that "this was the first occasion on which Professor Vaillancourt's fields were singled out as ones requiring such exceptional qualities," and concluded that the department had acted inconsistently.

The department had tried to invalidate the high student evaluation of Vaillancourt's teaching on the grounds that only interested students would enroll in her courses. But the committee rejected this argument, pointing out that so long as non-compulsory courses were involved, "if it applies to one teacher it applies to all."

The committee clearly stated that it was illegitimate for a department to use the probationary period to weed out "troublesome" professors and quashed the "congeniality" criterion used by many departments. According to Vaillancourt, "congeniality meant they could fire you if they didn't like the colour of your eyes."

Finally the committee ruled that it is no defense for the department to justify its decision on the grounds of the good faith or integrity of its departmental committee. Vaillancourt had contended that senior members of the department were biased against her for personal and political reasons. The committee neither accepted nor rejected the allegations of bias, but pointed out that "bias is not the opposite of integrity or good faith, and that recognition of integrity and good faith does not establish lack of bias."

Vaillancourt and Wallerstein are elated at the Committee's report and hope that the favourable outcome of the case will attract more faculty members to the McGill Faculty Union.

"We're not interested in flogging the dead horse of the Vaillancourt case," said Wallerstein. "But we want the implications of this report to be understood and incorporated into all departments at McGill. The committee of inquiry has made the rights of faculty explicit in a way they haven't been before."

Vaillancourt will not teach at McGill this year. To be sure of a job, she accepted a teaching position at the University of Quebec. She will be given a one-year leave of absence without pay from McGill and will be able to return this year.

Polisci department chairman Harold Waller said he was "disappointed" at the committee's decision.

"We felt we presented a strong case," he said. "Departments will find it more difficult to terminate people in the future. If they bother to try, they will find the termination process takes much longer."

The Board of Governors was not legally obliged to accept the committee decision. But Vaillancourt could have gone to court, and, according to Wallerstein, the strong evidence that the department's reasons for not renewing her contract were non-academic would certainly have been taken into consideration.

was an interception in the Raven end zone.

Outlook for Bishop's

In Lennoxville tomorrow the Redmen would like to mount a strong ground game. Scouting reports have indicated that Bishop's defence is weaker against the run than the pass, so Coach Baillie is hopeful that the Redmen offensive line will be able to handle the Gaiters' defensive line.

Defensively, the Redmen must stop Gaiter QB Mike Munzar, who loves to roll out and take off. This will put pressure on the McGill defensive ends, and linebackers, who will have to contain the roll out action. Coach Baillie is very optimistic about the Redmen's chances this weekend. One could almost feel the quiet confidence he has in his team. It's a good feeling.

NOTES: Ron Kelly and Fred Degraff are this year's co-captains... George Gaty and Kevin Corbett are doubtful while Mike Lorion (knee injury last weekend) is also a question mark... Don Cowie gained 104 yards on 22 carries against Carleton. Not bad at all... Bob Lapkovsky won the starting halfback position with his fine fourth quarter showing. Up to that point he and his two rivals for the job had netted minus yards rushing, as well as committing two fumbles...

Hostel reaction mixed

by Martin Braun

Was the youth hostel set up in the Students' Union building this summer a success?

Hostel employee Carla Stout thinks it was; Students' Society External Vice-President Earle Taylor thinks it wasn't; and Union manager Frank Costi thinks it was and it wasn't. Who can one believe? First of all, it must be understood that success means different things to different people. And the gauging of success varies too.

For Carla Stout it was a summer job and one with which she could draw comparisons. She had worked in a Toronto hostel for the two previous years, and when she read about the McGill hostel in the Daily, she immediately got in touch with co-ordinator Willie Reiss and landed the job.

The pay was $90 a week—the money coming from a $12,000 Opportunities for Youth grant from the Canadian government. Reiss and Richard Bendon were responsible for getting the grant.

The cost of staying in the hostel was 50 cents a night, which included supper and breakfast the next morning. Hostellers were allowed to stay a maximum of three consecutive nights. Anyone who couldn't pay the 50 cents had to make up for it by doing some menial work.

The official maximum number of people the hostel held was 150 people. The average a night was 130, but 210 were admitted on Labor Day in keeping with the policy of not turning anyone away. No dope or drink was allowed although this rule was difficult to enforce.

Carla Stout felt that the hostel was "a very worthwhile project." Most of the kids were American, she said, and they were very appreciative, because hostels were less frequent in the U.S. The total attendance was about 13,000 people, or $5,000 to $6,000. Most people, she went on, paid the 50 cents. And even more important, everyone got along well together.

Earle Taylor saw the hostel from a different point of view, feeling that the Students' Union building simply was not an adequate location for a hostel. Even disregarding the minor vandalism, a couple of bad drug problems, and the theft of some costumes from the Players' Club, Taylor believed that the use of three additional floors and a basement for the hostel encouraged wandering to an uncomfortable degree. This wandering, although leading possibly to major theft and vandalism, resulted principally in one "helluva messy Union".

But wandering aside, the job of keeping the main floor clean was difficult enough. Although the TV lounge furniture was in poor condition before the hostel, after the summer it was in such an abysmal state that 30 new pieces had to be ordered.

Frank Costi enjoyed the hostel and said he would like to see it again next year, but only on the condition that five portable showers be set up in the women's washroom on the main floor.

The absence of these showers caused the washroom areas to be in a disgusting state, Costi said, and as a result, the hostel staff avoided it. His men had to clean the mess up when they came to work in the morning.

But another opinion on the matter was voiced by former Internal Vice-President David Weiner. Weiner said that after an eight-month school year, it takes the entire summer to fix the Union up, and with the presence of the hostel, unnecessary expenses were incurred and precious time was lost.

He also felt that although he would not go so far as to say that the hostel was an easy way for a handful of friends to make a fast buck, he believed that the nine hostel workers were more involved in their all-night card games than in putting a check on the crashers' wanderlust and in keeping the place clean.

Similar charges were made by an informed source, close to the hostel, who charged that co-ordinator Reiss scrimped on food by serving peanut butter sandwiches to make money for himself and his friends in the hostel.

SORRY, JOHN

A by-line was inadvertently left off yesterday's story entitled "McGill students will study in China." The story was written by John Price, president of the East Asian Students Association.

ERRATUM

The Daily erroneously reported yesterday that Senate approved an amendment to the University Statutes defining student eligibility requirements for university government. In fact, Senate accepted the recommendations of a committee studying eligibility but did not amend the statutes.

King takes Riggs in pointless match

by Gordon Patterson

Among the many superlatives thrown about before and during last night's tennis match between Bobby Riggs and Billie Jean King, only one really applied.

The contest probably had the biggest build-up of any tennis match. It had all the hype of a college football game and heavy-weight boxing match combined. The two participants were brought in on floats, and there were bands, cheerleaders, and thousands of placards and buttons glorifying one player or the other.

The match took place in the Astrodome in Houston, Texas, with seat prices ranging up to $100 for courtside seats and lots of celebrities on hand. There was enough verbal sparring before the match to put Muhammad Ali to shame.

In a pre-game interview Riggs stated "This is the greatest match in the history of tennis." The interviewer was none other than Howard Cosell, brought in specially for this event. Said Cosell, "Bobby Riggs is the greatest hustler in history". But Riggs wasn't the only hustler involved.

Almost 40,000 people turned up at the Astrodome, the largest turnout ever for a single tennis match. The prize money of more than $200,000 for the winner and $100,000 for the loser, is also a record. The match took up two and one-half hours of prime time TV.

Too bad the match was such a bust.

Everyone concerned kept saying how good the whole thing was for tennis. In fact it did just the reverse. It turned out to be a show on the level of roller derbies or professional wrestling. Riggs showed how tennis should not be played. His repertoire is made up largely of trick shots which force his opponent to make mistakes. King was not fooled and she often caught him flat footed as she easily won 6-4, 6-3, 6-3.

Billie Jean King is a fine tennis player but she had little chance to show off her talents against Riggs. The match was a bore but Cosell kept trying to convince his audience that it was a sporting event of great importance.

To add suspense, the game was billed as a battle of the sexes, but it proved absolutely nothing. Anyone who thinks that a tennis game has anything to do with the liberation of women can't be serious. The match couldn't have proved less if one of the participants had been a trained ape.

Billie Jean King is a better tennis player than Bobby Riggs but she is not as good as Margaret Court, who was soundly beaten by Riggs. In fact, there were no losers in the match itself.

Before the match Billie Jean stated, "The women's movement is important to me...it's making life better for a lot of women." Her own contribution has been to demand parity in prize money between men and women tennis players. This enabled her to win $200,000 in one year.

But she has not gone as far as to demand parity in winnings among her fellow tennis players, most of whom make much, much less than she does. When it suits her, competition must be maintained. It doesn't suit her to suggest that ticket prices for customers be reduced, or for that matter, to ask where her bloated salary comes from.

In last night's farce the real losers were all working men and women. The real issues involved were hidden behind the cheap facade and the phony question of the liberationist King taking on the sexist Riggs. The match was so blown out of proportion that it lost any honour it might have had. Even Riggs and King seemed to be aware of this.

No doubt they tried to live up to their billing, but to do that would have been impossible.

Council refuses to pay Kopp

Students' Council last night refused a request by Daily cartoonist George Kopp that he receive a salary for his work and instead voted to accept applications for a cartoonist until October 10.

Kopp asked Council for a salary of $2,500 for 100 cartoons this year. He has drawn cartoons for the Daily since 1969 and has not received any money.

Council members argued that all Students' Society positions must be filled by open applications.

"Council is making me lean and hungry," Kopp said, "but don't quote me on that.

"I'm not going to apply to be the cartoonist, because I am the cartoonist."

He said he was not sure if he would continue drawing for the Daily.

Daily editor Joan Mandell said the paper would not accept any cartoonist other than Kopp. "Council should pay George for his work," she said.

Kopp said the Sir George student paper, the Georgian, has offered him $50 a week for two cartoons.

Handbook editors called before Council

Students' Council last night voted to call the editors of the 1973-74 handbook before it to answer criticism that they used the handbook to promote their own personal beliefs.

Management rep Bennett Little—who appointed the handbook's three editors last spring—said he had reservations at the time, but thought they would edit the book in a non-partisan way.

Little said Council should ask "the three geniuses to appear before Council to explain the manner in which they chose not to express their beliefs."

The editors described themselves in the handbook as "active Christians" and thanked "God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, for his help."

The book has attracted much criticism on campus for promoting the Christian religion.

Sports

Women's athletic scene

by Karen Smith

The field hockey team is always the first women's team to get under way at McGill. The girls have been practising daily for two weeks now, and, as a result of their hard work, were victorious in their first home game of the season. McGill won by a decisive 4-0 score against the Pioneers, a team of Pointe Claire women. The Pioneers always offer McGill pretty tough opposition.

Coach Jan Meyers was very pleased with the girls' effort and commented that for the first game of the season, the team showed incredible potential. She anticipates a very good season. Particularly impressive was the work of the halfback line, which combined with the strong attack of the forward line to prevent the Pioneers from getting any shots on goal.

Pat Austin, playing centre forward, netted two of the four goals, while Sue Paquette and Linda Chippendale scored one apiece.

This weekend the McGill Invitational Field Hockey Tournament will be held at Ile Ste. Helene. Intermediate and senior teams from McGill, Queen's, and various Montreal clubs will be playing three games each in pre-season competition. Games start Sunday morning at 9. Don't miss this chance to see the best teams in Montreal in action.

Intramurals

If you are interested in getting into shape and meeting other girls from your faculty, fraternity, or residence, intramurals are just the thing for you. Participation and enjoyment, rather than proficiency in the sport, are stressed, and, by participating, you add points to your unit's total.

The entries for intramural field hockey must be in by Tuesday, September 25, and for soccer, by der romped the remaining 20 yards to pay dirt, unmolested. Ravens 18, Redmen 0.

On the ensuing kick-off, QB Auders finally put a scoring march together. The 65-yard drive ended with a lovely 27-yard TD pass to flanker Ross Brooks, who was running a post pattern.

In the fourth quarter both offences really began to move the ball. Carleton scored their final touchdown on a long drive which didn't feature a single pass.

The Redmen almost returned the favour. The offensive line came to life and fullback Don Cowie was able to rip off several sizable gains. The Redmen put a good portion of their statistics on the board in this quarter, but were unable to score. Twice they came away empty handed after penetrating the Carleton 25 yard line. On one occasion they failed on a third and twelve situation, while the other

Thursday, September 27. Look for sign-up sheets on all major bulletin boards around campus, or drop by the Currie Gym to sign up.

The Intramural Golf Tournament is being held on Thursday, September 27 at the Royal Montreal Golf Club. Green fees are only $2.50. To sign up or to obtain more information, drop in to see Anne Patterson at the Women's Athletics office in the gym, or phone her at 392-4547. You must be registered by Wednesday to play.

The Jogging marathon this year is starting on Monday, September 24 and will continue until Friday, October 5. Laps may be jogged, walked, or crawled any time of the day that you can fit them in, but they must be done at Molson Stadium. Each lap is worth one quarter of a point to your unit. A list will be posted in the women's locker room, where you can check the results daily.

Once again, the Women's Athletic Association is offering you a wide variety of instructional, intramural, and intercollegiate programs. For information about them, feel free to drop by the Women's Athletics Office in the gym. There you can pick up an athletics pamphlet if you didn't receive one at registration.

Redmen will rebound

by Elliott Pap

Most of us can probably remember the late-French entertainer, Maurice Chevalier, and his famous song "Thank heaven for little girls." Well, if we may borrow the tune, we'd like to give you our version which is "Thank heaven for exhibition games!"

It's no secret by now (unless Pat Hickey is not on your reading list) that the Redmen lost an exhibition game to the Carleton Ravens last Saturday. The score was 25-6 and the McGill men did not look very good. However, not to worry, not to worry.

"This is what an exhibition game is for," said Coach Charlie Baillie. "It gives us (the coaching staff) an excellent opportunity to evaluate our personnel. We have finally been able to establish our first string line-ups. Our rookies have obtained some game experience. We'll be ready for Bishop's tomorrow. We'll be ready."

Against Carleton, the Redmen were definitely not ready. There were numerous mental breakdowns as well as physical breakdowns. Plays were forgotten, passes were dropped, pitch-outs were fumbled. Generally a sloppy performance, but nothing that could not be corrected by a lot of hard work and a little more concentration.

Ravens open scoring

In the Carleton game the Ravens opened the scoring in the first quarter on a one-yard plunge by their fullback Stephen Walsh. The touchdown was set up by an interception of a Dis Aude's pass which was returned to the McGill 15.

After holding the Redmen to another first-downless sequence, the Ravens took Ron Kelly's punt on their 19, returned it to their 45, received 15 more yards as McGill piled on, threw a 25-yard pass and, oh my gosh, were in scoring position once more.

The Redmen defence tightened up here (yeah!) so Raven kicker Derek Roberts booted a 35-yard field goal. That play opened the second quarter.

Coach Baillie decided that now was the time to put back-up QB Tony Pietroniro into the game. As might be expected with a rookie, Pietroniro's first play was a disaster. A pitchout to Bob Lapkovsky (also a rookie) resulted in a fumble which Lapkovsky managed to recover after a nine yard loss.

Pietroniro showed his poise on the next play, though, by calmly stepping into the pocket and firing a perfect pass into Ron Kelly's arms. That kid's alright. But, oh no, can it be that Ron Kelly dropped the pass? Third and nineteen. Punting team on the field.

The second quarter produced one more Carleton point on a wide field goal attempt. Meanwhile the Redmen had managed three first downs on their own, three first downs on Raven penalties, but sadly, three more turnovers.

The third quarter provided additional harrowing moments for the big Red, but it also gave us our only touchdown. First the bad news.

Redmen halfback hopeful Trevor Campbell fumbled on his initial carry and the Ravens recovered on our 52. Three plays later they notched their second TD as McGill defender Brian Quick tipped a Raven pass directly into Scott Alex-
